The LEISURE LINK

I. PURPOSE:

- To increase awareness of leisure activities and available community resources.
- To determine feasibility of pursuing appealing leisure interests.

II. COMMENTS:

A healthy balance of one's schedule includes active leisure pursuits. At times, many people are in need of new leisure interests or reinvolving themselves with previous leisure activities. Choosing leisure activities can be tricky because it involves so many factors . . . Can I afford this? Do I have the time? Will this allow me quiet time? Will this connect me with other people? Does it require too much planning? Is it close enough for me to get there? Benefits of leisure are numerous! They include relaxation, self-improvement, having fun, meeting new people, taking risks, exercising, stimulating the mind, etc.

III. POSSIBLE ACTIVITIES:

- A. 1. Photocopy handout and cut each leisure activity into a strip of paper.
- 2. Fold strips in half, place in a basket and ask each group member to pick one strip of paper.
- 3. Ask for a volunteer to act out chosen leisure activity as a charade, the other group members guessing the leisure activity.
- 4. When the group has correctly guessed, discuss together who might be interested in pursuing this activity.
- 5. Continue asking for volunteers until each person has had a turn. If time permits, continue until all activities have been played.
- 6. Process activity by discussing possible community resources.
- 7. Offer handout as homework assignment for next group session.
- B. 1. Gather resource information prior to group, e.g., telephone books, pamphlets, brochures, coupons, advertisements, park brochures, sports page of newspaper, etc.
- 2. Photocopy handouts and distribute to each group member.
- 3. Instruct group members to complete handout individually.
- 4. Ask each member to share two or three leisure activities of interest.
- 5. Request that each member share one activity each would like to do but can't afford.
- 6. Problem solve as a group ways to see if there are solutions as to how it might be affordable, e.g., can't afford an electronic game, but can save up money and go to a video arcade once in a while.
- 7. Place resource information in center of the table and allow group members to look through, obtaining information each might need to implement activities.
- 8. Process activity with discussion of availability of resources for leisure activities.

LEISURE VALUES

I. PURPOSE:

To identify values regarding leisure by analyzing qualities of activities.

To identify present leisure habits and compare them to leisure values.

II. GENERAL COMMENTS:

It is important to be aware of the reasons certain leisure activities are enjoyed so that efforts can be made to continue having satisfying experiences. Oftentimes, people say that they value certain types of activities yet do not engage in these. Leisure habits may be modified if needed to include values and increase satisfaction.

III. POSSIBLE ACTIVITIES:

- A.
 1. Explain concept of balancing work, leisure, and self-care activities.
 2. Instruct group members to complete handout by identifying 6 leisure activities they enjoy: past and present.
 3. Next ask them to check all qualities that "attract" them to each of these activities.
 4. Encourage them to write a narrative response describing the differences/similarities between their leisure habits and their leisure values and answer remaining questions on handout.
 5. Facilitate discussion regarding insights and process benefits of leisure involvement.
- B.
 1. Write each of the 18 listed leisure qualities on separate index cards and shuffle.
 2. Instruct group members to take turns choosing a card and identifying one leisure activity they enjoy which has that quality. Continue until all 18 are discussed.
 3. Facilitate discussion regarding insights and process benefits of leisure involvement.
